Capital H To Be Major Human Capital Services Firm Under New Ownership

MILWAUKEE, WI – June 10, 2003 – An investor group led by Daniel J. Weinfurter and Gregory J. Silich has acquired Capital H, Inc., a company focused on helping leaders drive tangible business performance improvement through improved human capital solutions and practices.

Founded in Milwaukee in 2001, Capital H Group (renamed) has had success by providing an alternative to the global human capital consulting firms. With substantial resources from private equity backing, the executives will leverage their past successes to build upon the company's current Chicago and Milwaukee base, and use both organic growth and strategic acquisitions to expand to serve mid-size and large corporations across the country.

Mr. Weinfurter also hopes to leverage his track record of entrepreneurial success. "Based on my experience and on tangible statistics, there is a direct correlation with the adoption and implementation of human capital best practices and improved bottom line performance of the business. Capital H Group will succeed by educating the marketplace of these realities."

Weinfurter, Chief Executive Officer, and Silich, Chief Operating Officer, will lead the new management team with a demonstrated ability to create the vision, hire outstanding talent to fuel growth, and acquire appropriate human capital services organizations to rapidly build a world class organization.

In the seven years before becoming CEO of Capital H, Dan Weinfurter was the founder and chief executive of Parson Consulting, an international firm serving the finance, accounting, and business systems areas of large organizations. Prior to that, Dan was the Number 2 executive at Alternative Resources Corp., which provides information technology operations outsourcing, consulting, and staffing to large corporations throughout the US and Canada. In both of these positions, Dan delivered exceptional growth rates and the companies were recognized by awards such as Inc. Magazine's listing as #1 fastest growing private company in the US. Prior to ARC, Dan worked for General Electric for 8 years in a variety of sales, marketing, and managerial roles.

Formerly, Chief Financial Officer of Leo Burnett Worldwide, Inc., Greg Silich brings a strong background in global business services as well as significant experience in finance, administration, and business operations. He has provided leadership in managing the worldwide financial operations of his former company and developed numerous innovative financial and operational programs and tools to deliver outstanding financial results. He also managed, negotiated, and integrated over 40 acquisitions, joint ventures, and mergers.

Both Dan and Greg are excited to have the opportunity to build a rapidly growing, service-oriented business focusing on human resource solutions through both consulting and outsourcing to corporate America.
